REFUGEES MAKE MICHIGAN STRONG

Miguel Abrahantes grew up a Catholic in Cuba where he and his family were forced to practice their religion in secret for fear of punishment by the government. In 2000 after completing an engineering doctorate degree in Argentina he got on a plane to Miami and sought asylum. He was then resettled as a refugee in Michigan with the help of Bethany Christian Services. He took a job working on an assembly line at night and studied English in the morning. Within a year, he had earned a research position at Indiana University. A year later he returned to Michigan and began teaching at Davenport University. In 2004 he accepted a position at Hope College teaching electronics engineering and doing a part-time research project for NASA, where he was developing a mobility system for robots for planet exploration called a Tetwalker. Miguel, became a naturalized citizen, continued to practice Catholicism and met his wife at a Catholic spiritual retreat in 2003. They have two children together, a son and a daughter.
