REFUGEES MAKE MINNESOTA STRONG

Somalia's Dehabo Hassan Maow faced grueling challenges as a disabled teen refugee, and now she's working to help other girls carve out a fighting chance. At just 14 years old, Dahabo Hassan Maow was caught in the crossfire of Somalia's civil war and injured so gravely that doctors were forced to amputate her leg at the knee. With no family (she was orphaned as a baby) or support, she fled her homeland, traveling by unpaved road to what she hoped would be the relative safety of Dadaab, the world's largest refugee camp, in Kenya. Later that year, Dahabo was resettled in the United States—first in Fargo, North Dakota, and eventually in Minneapolis, which has one of the country's largest Somali populations.
